Pulsor and Feng Shui

I am a practitioner of Compass School Feng Shui. I began using Pulsor equipment in my work a few years after I began my practice of feng shui. I have used the Pulsor tools in two different ways.

1. To remedy the ill effects of electrical equipment, wiring problems, external power poles and geopathic stress.
2. To remedy the unpleasant energy which is left in some places after unhappy events. These events can have occurred in the building itself, or on the land prior to the construction of the building.

The first use is something which traditional feng shui isn't equipped to handle as it is a system which was devised before the advent of modern technology. Excellent traditional feng shui remedies will not touch this problem so clients can be left bewildered if they are still unhappy after they have hired a feng shui consultant.

The second use is something which traditional feng shui can help with, but it might not be completely effective.

Interestingly, I find that if Pulsor equipment is used before any feng shui remedies are implemented, there are very noticeable benefits - almost immediately in some cases - and the place is much improved whether or not the person continues with the standard remedies. Since the Pulsor equipment works on the field which is energetically "prior to" the chi field which feng shui deals with, anything else which is done will be easier to do, such as cleaning out an area, and will be more effective. The Pulsor equipment seems to aid the intuitive sense of the clients so that they more automatically do that which will create improvement.

I originally expected that Pulsor would provide help with EMF problems, but I didn't anticipate that 9 out of 10 people would experience noticeable, quick effects, rather than a few more sensitive people noticing subtle effects that would only be gradual over time. At times the equipment has been so effective as to be shocking.

I have seen some other environmental equipment, such as Clarus clocks and Plugbusters. The other products I've seen can't compare to Pulsor. They aren't as effective and often create a field which has a more pleasant feel to it, but still doesn't feel "natural". I can't imagine doing thorough feng shui work without Pulsor.

Thank you,

Holland Franklin
